The Abbey, Whitby, was founded as a Priory by St. Hilda, a lady of the royal house of Northumbria, in 657. Here several Saxon bishops passed their training, and here Caedmon, the father of Anglo-Saxon poetry, was a monk. Here, too, in 664, a famous conference was held to discuss the date of Easter. In 1074 the monastery was re-founded for Benedictines, and was raised to the dignity of an abbey. The church, beautiful even in ruin and decay, dates from this period.
